

2. The triangle class introduces a data redundancy in that it requires three lines to be constructed, each of which require two points to be constructed themselves. This is unnecessary because the lines contain the same information as could be obtained by just using the original three points. Therefore, to increase the efficiency of the triangle class, it should be constructed using three different points, instead of three lines.